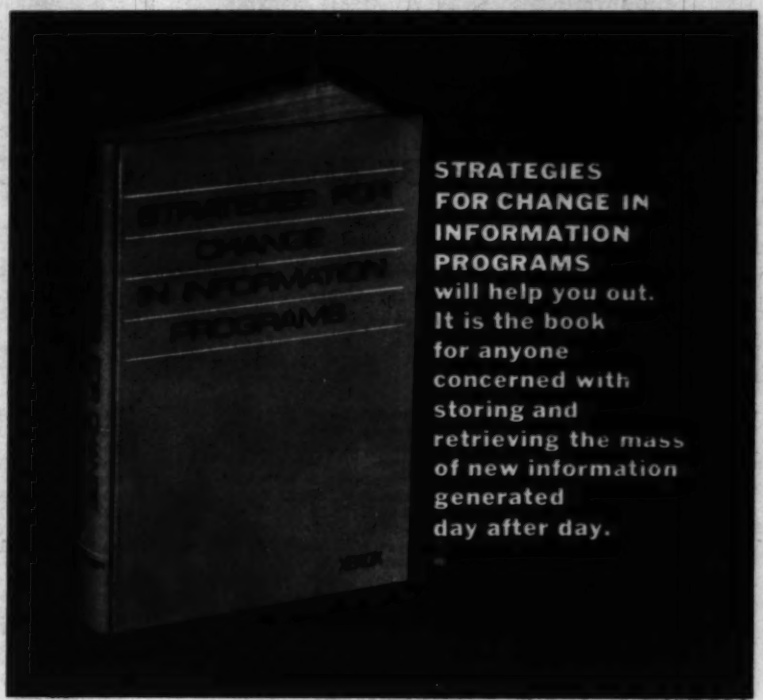
Bugged by the information explosion?



24 timely articles point the way to more efficient management of data!

Social scientists, computer technologists, behavioral scientists, educators, and librarians all pool their resources and insights to help you understand the nature of change and the new informational needs.

- How are librarians being prepared to deal with new demands made on information programs?
- What can behavioral theory and political theory contribute to create better learning environments?
- How can the threat of entropy work to spur change?

These are just some of the many questions and problems probed by such experts as Robert M. Gagné, Pauline Atherton, John R. Ball, and others.

They also focus on developing strategies for change so that library-media-information programs can become more responsive to clients' needs.

- They suggest a plan for a new kind of cooperation between all library-media-information professions.
- They look at how behavioral technology can be applied to selecting media.
- They examine how fieldwork can function as a learning laboratory.
- They discuss the value of a systems approach for creating an efficient response mechanism.

How does the government deal with business? How does business deal with the government?

THE ECONOMIC REGULATION OF BUSINESS AND INDUSTRY

A Legislative History of U.S. Regulatory Agencies

by Bernard Schwartz, Webb Professor of Law, New York University

Here's the full, documented story on nine of the most powerful federal regulatory agencies. Their legal and political basis, when and why they were formed, how they grew, who sanctioned them and fought them, how they expanded their power over so many vital areas of American life.

Now, for the first time, lawyers, scholars, students, educators, librarians, corporate officials have, in one convenient five-volume source, all the data needed to understand and deal with the federal agencies that control so much of our everyday lives.

Here are the Congressional debates, U.S. statutes, reports of House and Senate committees, Supreme Court decisions, and Presidential messages concerning:

* Interstate Commerce Commission
* Federal Trade Commission
* Federal Power Commission
* Federal Communications Commission
* Securities and Exchange Commission
* National Labor Relations Board
* Civil Aeronautics Board
* Federal Aviation Agency
* Department of Transportation

A commentary accompanies each major piece of documentation, clarifying its importance and placing it in historical perspective. A comprehensive index in Volume V enables you to pinpoint specific legislation, cases, individuals and companies, quickly and easily.

THE ECONOMIC REGULATION OF BUSINESS AND INDUSTRY is part of the highly-acclaimed series, STATUTORY HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES, edited by Bernard Schwartz.
